CUBAN BEARDS POP UP IN FAR-OFF ZANZIBAR

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanganyika (AP)—The first U.S. refugees from Zanzibar reported on their arrival today that Spanish-speaking men in Castro-like uniforms appeared to be the hard core of the African rebels who overthrew the island's Arab government. (See also Page 7.)

Stuart Lillicoe, public affairs officer of the U.S. Embassy in Zanzibar, told reporters here that a Cuban-looking type was the leader of the rebels who captured the Cable and Wireless Company's office. He said the man understood English but replied in Spanish and spoke no Swahili, the most common language of Zanzibar.

Price Wars 'Phoney On Gasoline

By FRANK RUTTER

Oil companies have created "phoney price wars" by manipulation of B.C. gasoline prices, a spokes-man for service stations charged today.

The oil companies have con-trolled retail gas prices to the extent that they have violated the spirit if not the law of Canada's Combines Act, said James L. Kinneard, secretarymanager of the Automotive Retailers' Association.

He was appearing before the B.C. government's royal commission into gasoline prices at the Law Courts here. ADMISSIBLE

Mr. Brown keenly cross-examined Mr. Kinneard on details of how the brief was drawn up, and demanded letters from individual service station operators who Mr. Kinneard said had offered suggestions about it.

He also was critical of the fact that portions of the brief had appeared in newspapers before its presentation. It was given to the press last December.

LEGAL LINEUP

An obstinate farmer is pitting his wits against persistent lawyers in Courtroom D.

Monday was the beginning, at the law courts here, of what those involved predict will be a long grind of public hearings of the B.C. government's royal con into gasoline prices.

The farmer is Omineca Social Credit MLA Cvril Shelford.

He fenced most of the day with lawyers for four major oil companies: Shell, Standard, Imperial and BA.

Each in turn asked him if he was complaining about the ability of the commission, conducted by County Court Judge C. W. Morrow, after he made a number of references to the "legal battery."

"I wish I had the money the oil companies did. Believe me I'd have a lineup as long as that desk," (about 12 feet) Mr. Shelford replied.

His stand was that the commission should hire economists and accountants to investigate the complicated price structures that he, a layman, couldn't.

He was accused by Douglas Mck. Brown, counsel for Shell, of making "unchecked, extravagant" and "irresponsible" statements

Mr. Shelford stuck to his guns that there is something wrong with the price spread of gas across the province, just as was found in 1935 by former judge M. A. Macdonald

He admitted that he had not been able to conduct detailed research to support all his contentions, but he promised to be available throughout the inquiry for cross-examination and to present whatever evidence he could

H. P. Lane, representing Standard Oil, accused him of basing his arguments on "guesswork."

"I don't think there's an organization in the province in a position to do anything but guesswork," Mr. Shelford replied.

"If the oil companies had come forward a long time ago with the cost of gasoline there wouldn't be guesswork."
"You're leading the field in guesswork?" asked Mr.

Lane.
"Unfortunately, yes," said Mr. Shelford.

His earlier contention that B.C. motorists could be paying more than $32,700,000 a year too much for gas was challenged by T. E. H. Ellis, acting for Imperial Oil. Mr. Shelford's point was based on a Macdonald report ommendation that gas prices be cut 10 cents.

Mr. Ellis said if that were done today to the Vancouver ice of gas, oil companies would be selling it at 2 cents below the cost of crude oil.

below the cost of crude oil.

Tax increases would be the major reason.

The Vancouver price of 39 cents includes 15 cents of provincial and federal taxes, 7 cents for the dealer's margin. If a further 10 cents were cut, the remaining remainder due to the oil companies would be 7 cents. The cost of crude oil was 9 cents a gallon, Mr. Ellis said.

Walter Owen, representing BA Oil, said he was "intrigued" by Mr. Shelford's earlier analogy with liquor prices—the same the province over.

prices—the same the province over.

"Liquor is a monopoly by the government at exorbitant prices to the public," Mr. Owen said.

Responded Mr. Shelford: "By a lot of people it's considered virtual monopoly in the oil business, too."

He said his aim was for a single base wholesale price to dealers, who then could, in true free enterprise style, set their own retail prices.

He said he hoped the oil companies would voluntarily equalize the wholesale prices, but a B.C. trade department report in 1961 indicated they wouldn't. In that case the B.C. Public Utilities Commission would have to do it, he

One lawyer, representing the independent Mohawk Oll Co., gave Mr. Shelford an easier time. R. C. Bray asked if Mr. Shelford objected to its method of buying gas from the major companies at less than the retail price.

"No. I wish there was more of you," Mr. Shelford said.

The water shortage developed when the level of Lake Erie and the level of the lake had risen slightly, allowing water through the intake. The water shortage developed when the level of Lake Erie dropped due to stiff northeast winds which pushed the water away from Buffalo.

Water at the intake pipe was four feet below normal. Ice floes jammed into the intake pipe and stopped the water flow.

Big Neighbor and Small

the United States for an arrangement under the sponsorship of the Organization of American States to the peace in the Canal Zone. But the basic problems still remain to be settled.

With the local situation under control, however, the way may be open for discussion between the two countries regarding new treaty terms, perhaps a whole new treaty, to govern United States tenure of the Canal Zone. 'As can be gathered from an article on this page today, the Panamanian problem is an old complicated one. It appears to have been further heightened, on the one hand, by a thrusting and sensitive Panamanian nationalism; on the other, by a certain lack of understanding and tact by United States authorities in the Zone and perhaps in Washington as well.

There are many facets to the situation. There is the Panamanian desire for a larger annual return from Canal operations, a feeling of resentment arising from alleged wage discrimination and lack promotion opportunities, a height-ened sensitivity regarding national prestige as exemplified in display of the flag in the United States occupied area, a growing belief that United States occupancy has cut Panamanians off from a large section of their country and denied them rights.

Against these factors there are the United States contentions that Canal income is down, particularly when the cost of defence is included; that terms of the existing treaty are being observed; that there have been numerous revisions in favor of Panama; that it should not be for-

A GREEMENT HAS BEEN gotten that the United States fur-reached between Panama and nished the engineering and medical skill and the financing that made the Canal possible; and that security the Canal is essential to the United States. These are some of the points that will be presented at the forth-coming negotiations. But there is another, larger consideration, which so car has not been stressed. In any dealings with a smaller neighbor the United States is on trial before world opinion. The Western colossus dare not in any sense appear in the role of a giant trampling the rights of a weaker nation. To do so would raise an immediate storm of criticism, particularly from Communist lands, that here was diabolical democratic imperialism in action, its nefarious purposes exposed when

The audience watching the current proceedings includes more than the Latin American nations which Washington has been trying to assist and enlist in a democratic front against the encroachment of Communism. It includes the new states of Africa, the undecided nations of Asia, the peoples all over the world who weigh the words of both democracles and Communist lands against their actions.

This is the narrow path then, which the United States must tread -protecting its needs in the Canal Zone and its good name abroad, It can leave no room for criticism that it has overstepped the bounds of justice and good neighborliness. President Johnson has made a good start with his preliminary an-nouncements. It will be the hope of all the Western allies, and particularly of Canada, that this hem-ispheric problem may be amicably settled at the earliest moment.

THE SPECIAL UNITED STATES government team of scientists and medical men researching the relationship between smoking and various diseases, some of them fatal, has added one more telling argument against the use of nico-

This is a familiar story. It will doubtless bring forth a rebuttal from the tobacco industry, and the rebuttal will be no more convincing than others which have preceded it

The simple, incontrovertible fact is that smoking is bad for you—so bad that it is definitely linked to a number of diseases which can be disabling or even fatal.

The mitigating circumstance in favor of the habit, if there is a mitigating circumstance, is found in the contention that smoking has some virtue "in the area of mental health, and the habit originates in a search for contentment. This seems to mean that a smoker can kid himself or herself into the conviction that he or she derives solace from a pipe, cigar or

Few thoughtful nicotine addicts will argue that their vice is any-thing but a bad habit, costly, in-jurious to health and, through the possibility of fire, potentially de-smoking, the special committee has served a useful purpose. The findings may frighten some smokers into quitting. It will have limited effect on others who admit all the ills that can be traced to the habit and who will be content to shorten their life expectancy by continued consumption of the weed.

But there is one field in which constructive work might be done. That lies in the opportunity to curtail the wide publicity in various media which suggests that smoking is "the thing to do," is sophisticated, is manly, or feminine—it depends on which commercials you watch on is the one cortain escape. constructive work might be done. watch—or is the one certain escape from the tensions of the day.

The Warning Bell

THE PRESS OF CANADA IS opinion, must be eternally vigilant. I rightly sensitive about any attempt, or even a seeming attempt, attempt, or even a seeming attempt, to impose controls on any facet of the newspaper industry. There are all too many elements ready to apply censorship, outside influence, censorship efforts of the past, the proposal to restrict ownership of Canadian newspapers to Canadian two-thirds of the countries these efforts have succeeded in greater or less degree, Canada is one of the lands in the fortunate one-third.

Yet even here it has been necessary from time to time to repulse attempts to interfere with the freedom of the press. Alberta was the scene of two such efforts, both defeated. There is always someone ready to try to muzzle the press for one reason or another. A free press, the people's only guarantee of freedom of expression and of It is because of this background citizens sounds a warning bell. Several eastern newspapers have expressed approval of the idea—they see it as giving protection to course, is simply the authority to specific canadian journals and reserving the money in the future. The call for such canadian field for Canadians. But authority in each new budget is therefore the real indicator of the trend of fedbe judged as much by what it could lead to as by what it is. And the thought that the government—any government—should get into the business of deciding who may operate Canada's newspapers is something to worry about.

We Need the Work

THE DEFENCE DEPARTMENT of Canada needs every support in its effort to reduce expenses. For this reason, when it recently cancelled orders for frigate construc-tion, there could be little argument regarding the principle of the move, although considerable hardship could be shown on a local basis as a result of the decrease in employment opportunities.

In the case of the rumored federal decision to move at least one of the three projected destroyer conversion jobs to eastern ship-yards; the situation is different. The ships in question have long been based here and it is logical that the modernization work on them should be done in west-coast yards.

If the government has some over-riding factor of cost or defence considerations in mind, there may be room for review. But if this is merely a matter of helping the industry in eastern Canada at the expense of shipbuilding here, then there can be little excuse for the corporation. In the Eisenhower defence times greater than the nuclear striking switch. On hearing of this action thousands of Panamanian students swarmed into the Zone and began overturning ears, smashing windows and setting fire to buildings. The Panamanians assert that U.S. tanks opened fire on the rioters, and in this be-lief President Chiari of Panama suspended diplomatic relations with the

The feeling over the Canal, however, es far deeper than anger at an insult to the national flag (though the flag is as sacrosanct to Latin Americans as the Crown to Britons) and is far from being to traditionally touchy and ebullient students.

The Canal problem, in fact, antedates both the Canal and the existence of the Panamanian Republic itself. A canal across the isthmus to connect the Caribbean with the Pacific was first mooted in 1550 when Panama was part of the Spanish Empire. It was again under consideration in 1771.

Colombia Plan

In 1823, when the Spanish Empire broke the new Republic of Colombia, of which Panama became a part, resusci-tated the project and asked the United States for help in carrying it out. The United States, too busy opening up the West, was not interested, but in 1850 she signed a treaty with Britain by which, in "composition should a canal be built, it would be "neu-stallations." and used equally by both countries

FROM WASHINGTON

In 1903 the United States returned to the scene and negotiated a treaty with Colombia whereby the U.S. should build the canal. However, the Colombian Senate was not satisfied with the terms of the treaty and refused to ratify it.

Thereupon, conveniently, the sporadic Panamanian separatist movement started ranamanan separatist movement started a revolution. Equally conveniently, the United States Navy happened to be on hand "to protect U.S. lives and property." It also prevented the Colombian authorities from putting down the revolt. The secessionists declared Panamanian independence. The U.S. promptly recognized the new government and negotiated a treaty with it.

Rights Signed Away

The inexperienced Panamanian delegates virtually signed away their rights to a 10-mile strip across the middle of their country, though Panamanian lawyers claim that their Ambassador in Washington was not empowered to sign. By the terms of the treaty the U.S. was authorized to build and operate a canal, and to lease a strip of land five miles wide or with the strip of land five miles. wide on either aide of it, to be under U.S. jurisdiction "in perpetuity." The Canal was completed on the eve of the First World War and has ever since been a bone of contention between the United States and Panama and between the United States and the rest of Latin America. Colombia, in particular, was riled, claiming with some justifica-tion that she had been robbed—a view implicitly accepted by the U.S. in 1923 when she paid Colombia 25 million dollars

Last year's agreement, apart from deal ing with the question of the flag, cleared up some other specific causes of com-plaint. Government money owed for income tax by Panamanian employees in the zone. But the basic grounds for grievance remain inherent in the situation. And, ironically, at a time when Panamanians are asking for a higher rent for the Canal in view of the fall in value of money, Canal revenues are, in fact, dropping.

The final irony of all is that the North Americans have been hinting that the present Canal is becoming inadequate the size of modern shipping, as well as strategically vulnerable, and that they might build another one somewhere else, perhaps Nicaragua. I have often read Arthur Mayse's column and liked it, except when it is fishy. Now for two days running he sets out to annoy me seriously.

(Jan. 9) he commented on the absurdity of titles for Canadians, with mention of Lord Thomson. He says the English of Lord Thomson. He says the English are a "different race from Canadians." How does he make this out, when a good percentage of people in this country are of English parentage?

Actually the only genuine Canadians are the Indians. All others might be able to call themselves so after another ten or fifteen generations. But not yet.

Only on paper.

It would save endless confusion if citizens of the Commonwealth were to call themselves just that and not break themselves up into component parts. As for suggesting that a title be-stowed by the Queen might be replaced by a medal from that shameless racket that is known as the Canada Council, well, may the Lord help us if ever that came to pass.

It seems to me that Canada would benefit prodigiously by having a titled class of more leisured people, much more glamorous than the dead level of misters

The peerages and titles in the Old Country were originally bought or be-stowed by the king for services to the country, and through the centuries these honors were usually lived up to and so produced descendants of good breeding and a sense of "noblesse oblige," neither of which are to be depised.

NATURE ON THE ISLAND

By CLIFF CARL The Elephant Seal

Dear Dr. Carl:

Some weeks ago an animal thought to be an elephant seal was sighted in Saanich Inlet. What is an elephant seal? ... Is it comon in British Columbia? Where es it come from?

The elephant seal is a large marine mammal; mature males may be 16 feet long and weigh about 2½ tons. Males are also distinguished by having an overgrown snout which hangs down in front of When roused the animal inflates the proboscis causing it to rise something like the trunk of an elephant. This feature, and possibly its large size, account for the common name of elephant seal. These seals are dirty greyish-brown in color, not tan as in the case of sea-lions, and the skin is usually much wrinkled. They have the habit of floating with the head and shoulders well up out of the water, giving the impression of a "dead-head" rather than a seal. Usually they allow a boat to approach quite close and when they submerge they do so by finking slowly into the water.

along the British Columbia coast for many years but they certainly are not common.

First evidence of their presence came from Mr. Max Lohbrunner, retired sealer and long-time resident of Victoria, who reported seeing one of these animals in April and again in May, 1934, near the Gander Islands off Queens Sound. Since that time there have been numerous reports ranging Finally more concrete evidence was obtained in 1944 when a 15-foot male was killed by a fisherman near Pine Island, Queen Charlotte Strait. By the time the collector Charlotte Strait. By the time the collector had finished celebrating his success the animal was beyond use as a mounted specimen but the skull was eventually salvaged and now reposes in the study collection of the University of British Columbia.

In 1952 a second animal, 13% feet long, was killed at Ucluelet. The complete skeleton of this one was obtained by Charles Guiguet curator of mammals at the Provincial Museum and is now in the study

More recently elephant seals have been seen at Estevan Point, Carmanah Point, in Becher Bay, and near Trial Island. Just a few weeks ago an animal answering the description was sighted in Brentwood Bay by several persons including our well-known fishing guide Jimmy Gilbert. Some days later Mr. and Mrs. David L. What is magnetic ore?

Several minerals have some faint magnetic properties, but sooty-black magnetite often hats all the properties of a strong magnet. Two small samples of magnetite have enough magnetic pull to attract each other and cling together. Some samples of magnetite have enough magnetic pull to attract each other and cling together. Some samples of magnetite have enough magnetic pull to attract each other and south magnetic poles. They are natural lodestones and a sliver of this strongly-magnetized mineral can be used to make a magnetic compass.

Magnetite is rich in from and plentiful deposits often are used as ore from which from is extracted. It is a magnetic ore of iron. There is no shortage of magnetite in the earth's crust. Rich deposits exist in New England and other eastern states. There is more magnetite in Utah and still more in California.

When you go behind the net, one will come in and delay you. The other will come in and either knock you down or try to get the puck away from you.

I did that once. There was somebody there, all right. Only he was an opposing defenceman. And they scored a goal on my pass. So it never pays to guess, you should look. When you're taking the puck behind your own net to get organized, if you've got the man advantage, if you see the two dive bombers coming in on you fast, just pull up. If one comes behind the net, then it's just a matter of knowing where the other guy is. A lot of times you can absorb a body check. You can actually go to the ice with him and tie him up. Then that leaves only their three against your four. And you've got more room yet to manoeuvre in.

Two years ago we introduced Uniside, an improvement on Single-Unit construction. Now the entire sides of a Rambler are stamped out of single sheets of steel. By reducing the number of welds and cutting down the possibility of error, it provides a more perfect door fit and an even more rugged car body.

Exceptional and exclusive features like this provide Rambler with everything it takes to make Canada's best car value. Visityour Rambler dealer soon and see what we mean.

Exclusive Uniside. The entire sides of the car are stamped out of single sheets of steel to give a more rigid car body.

Rugged, long-wearing all-welded Single-Unit squeaks and rattles.

It asked the royal commission on taxation to give primary consideration to a federal tax policy that would assist all levels of government in a Canada-wide program of economic expansion.

With property taxes as the main source of revenue, many municipalities h a v e reached "the safe limit of their borrowing capacity." Vast programs of urban physical redevelopment could not be deterred indefinitely; education easist tripled between 1951 and 1961 and there is no indication of a change in the trend.

The federation estimated that about $27,000,000 is paid each year by municipal governments to the federal treasury through sales tax, and this will be autostantially increased with the additional tax on building materials.

It also was suggested that property owners should not have to pay income tax on the money they spend on municipal taxation. "In effect, Canadian property of the control of erty owners are subject to double taxation. . . ,"

Ever noticed there's no "Z" on the latest type of telephone dial? Why not?

Jack Paar voiced concern recently that NBC-TV's new satire series "That Was the Week That Was" would drag his own audience down because it would never get off the ground and prove a dial-twister. He needn't have worried. If his own show produced just 50 per cent of the sparkle "TW3" did in its debut last Friday he would be doing something.

The new half-hour show was full of the high spirits expected of it. It may have difficulty because it is a mid-season entry and sched-uled on a low viewing night but the show, adapted from the British television success, should survive.

The debut, with Elliott Reid, Audrey Meadows Nancy Ames, Henry Morgan, Doro Merands, Burr Tillstrom and David Frost (host of the British ver-sion) was far superior to the hour-long effort pre-

There were some very clever swipes which drew blood and some very not funny attempts at wit.

In one skit, for instance, an Arab hotel clerk refused a room to a man who has come from Israel. As the man turns away, we see he is a clergyman, and he says, "All right, I'll tell His Holiness." The Pope was in the Holy Land and was a big story of the week.

One of the brightest moments was Doro Merande who was interviewed as a past winner who hadn't made the best-dressed-women list. Asked how she accounted for missing the list, she replied: "A simple mistake. I went for those lousy boots." She also made note of the lack of virility of some designers.

Another which brought the house down was a brief, racy soliloquy by David Frost. It was necessary to know that Britain's Prime Minister, Lord Home, pronounces his last name "Hume." Frost told viewers Lord Home was in bed with flu. Then he suggested how the sentence might sound if the "U" throughout was pronounced "O".

Some of the humor was keyed low. An attempted reference to the Panama crisis was tasteless, what with the killing and strife in the Canal Zone at the

It is an adult show from start to finish. It needled and will continue to needle and will attract attention through the anger which will be directed

It will be most unfortunate if it creates so much bad feeling that strings pulled in proper circles will force the show to dull its barbs. If this should occur

It has a long way to go but it got off the ground in fine style and should become a "must" show if

TIME FLIES WITH MISS SKINNER

They Squirm Delightedly THE LINES! Introduced as "a distinguished fisherman," Opposition Leader John Diefenbaker When Her Needle Strikes

Invisible presences peopled the Royal Theatre Monday night.

The on-stage presence of Connelia Otis Skinner, one of the few true heiresses of a great theatrical tradition, was in liself enough to conjure up shades in the longer memories among the capacity audience present.

There might even have been a few elderly members who in their younger days had seen Miss Skinner's father in the theatre's opening performance of "Kismet" in 1913.

But there were other presented the sketch about the "annual hoard of Amurrican tourists descending on Parls."

But there were other presented the transformed herself in the cessories are, and as is her niliarious command of various regional accents, the true impact comes from her genious for projecting from the inner source of her imagination.

This is what makes us see the needle and thread and the clicking knitting needles that are not there; the 20 years of age that appear without a stroke of makeup, and not only the reality of her central characterization, but the whole cast of extras with which she peoples the stage.

But there were other presences of more vital dimension and these were conjured up by Miss Skinner herself.

Her program consisted of five solo plays or sketches.
It tasted for two hours, including intermission, and they were the shortest two hours this reviewer has ever spent in the theatre.

Watchers Spot More Beaks Than Normal

A bohemian waxwing appeared in the annual count in the Toronto area for the first time, but a Nova Scotia enthusiast upstaged the Toronto watcher by spotting a flock of 16.

Victoria watchers saw mourn-ing doyes that should have left long ago for Southern Califor-nia. A lone sabine gull, a refugood acorn crop were reasons given by Manitoba watchers for an increase in sightings, especially the bluefay count, 64 compared with nine the previous years. The count in Winniper was 3,517 birds of 32 species, including 2,400 English sparrows. Herring gulls were the most common species sighted in the Saint John area of New Brunswick. Unusual were two brown thrashers and a redwing black-bird. Counted were 42 species second highest ever. A harlequin duck was among the 33 species seen at Lepreau, N.B.

A hard winter was blamed for a decrease in the number of birds seen in the Halifax area. Spotters in Halifax east recorded 52 species compared with the 10-pear average of 57. The sighting of the behemian waxwings, normally inhabitants of the nathwestern part of the continent, was only the seventh ever in the district.

There was no bird count in Prince Edward Island.

Newfoundland watchers observed 21 species. Most abundant were see gulls. A single flicker was seen.

WELFARE BLUEPRINT

Ruby McKay Speaks Out

One of British Columbia's most respected authorities in social welfare joined today in the growing appeal for reforms in welfare

Miss Ruby McKay, former superintendent of child welfare for B.C., broke a three-year silence granting an exclusive Times interview.

It was her first public statement since she quit the government service Dec. 31, 1960, with the explanation of the contraction of the contraction tion that restrictive government policies made it impossible for her to do an adequate job.

In her interview, Miss

McKay made it clear she was inspired to discuss welfare problems only in the hope that her criticisms would be accepted in a constructive light — and she was not joining in any attacks or name-cailing.

Her major points, which will receive elaboration in a subsequent series of arti-

None more virtuous than a reformed sinner, and with practically two weeks of non-smoking behind me, I'm tempted to view with alarm my friends who are still knocking back their 40 cigarettes a day.

That, though, would be to tempt the foolkiller. After there are other ills beside those allegedly fostered by cigarette smoking, and I've been told by losers that the urge to light up can strike treacherously months even years after you believe the battle won.

What I'd like to do is simply pass on certain observa-tions recorded during the 13-plus days in which I've been unlearning a habit estab-lished while I was still in

Of these, I think the vitally important one is that to get off the cigarette kick even for so pitiably short a time as Fve done, one must truly and sincerely wish to

Before, I never did, not away deep down. I made conditions and set time limits. Once, grudgingly, I undertook not to smoke for five days.

As the fifth day wore on, I found myself awaiting the deadline like a sprinter poised to take off. Three seconds after the yearned-for hour, I was dragging deep on a clearwise. deep on a digarette.

Very well, then. If quitvery wen, then. If quit-ting cold is so hard, why not accomplish the hoped-for re-sult by tapering off, pain-lessly, over a period of

In theory, that's a fine lea, and should work. Right now in Victoria, there are a lot of people who since Saturday have laid out neat little reduction plans for themselves.

Something like this: "Now, we'll have the first cigarette with our coffee at breakfast. Then one at 10:30, and another after lunch. One with a drink before dinner, one after dinner, and a last one at bedtime. Let's see, that makes how many?" By an optimist's count, that makes only six cigarettes a day. By a realist's, it means a mounting progression which within a month will land you right back where you started.

Take it from one who has tried in the past: tapering off absolutely . . . does . . . not . . . work! You quit cold, or you stay a smoker.

Perhaps the medical-pharm-aceutical aids have merit. I'd less skeptical about them if I'd yet encountered a man or woman who can claim hon-estly that he made a lasting break with the weed by any means other than unassisted stringently maintained willpower.

Reactions differ, but if you happen to be one of the many who took his or her last puff when the United States surg eon-general and his uniquely unhealthy-looking crew swung their big one, your bad day may well be Thursday.

Why this should be, I haven't the foggiest notion. I only know that fifth day seems to be the pivotal one, a sort of Cape Horn which must be rounded before the winds
